

READING GROUP BLUEPRINTS

Expand your philosophical education with the Diversity Reading List in Philosophy

Of the 377 courses taught at the top 10 British Philosophy departments

8.3%

focus on any philosophical tradition other than the Western Analytic tradition

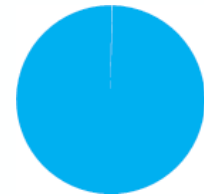

3.1%

focus on any of the four broad topics of class, colonialism, race or gender

10.6%

have any non-token content related to class, colonialism, race or gender at all

0%

of courses about a specific philosopher are about someone who was not a white man

Research from 2020-21

Want to learn something different?

Students are often dissatisfied with the lack of diversity in their curriculum. But what can you do if a topic you want to learn about simply isn't taught? Start your own reading group!

And if this sounds like a daunting task, we are here to help. The Diversity Reading List team prepared a selection of ready-made Blueprints you can use to create your reading group. Each one offers a set of resources, divided by topic and arranged into a consistent narrative, accompanied by a list of questions to guide your discussion.

We hope that these Blueprints will help you explore a wide range of topics that interest you and fill the gaps left in your curriculum.

Happy learning!

Some of our Blueprint topics so far

- African Languages and African Philosophy
- Chinese Philosophy of Mind
- Class, Status, and Aesthetics
- Female Philosophers in African Philosophy
- Feminist Logic
- Nahua and Mayan Philosophy of Mind
- Native North American Ethics
- Non-Western Ecologies: A Selection
- Objectionable Commemorations
- Postcolonial Theory, Race and Caste
- Race and Aesthetics in Latin America
- Race, Disability, and Gender in Bioethics
- Sex, What Is It Good For?
- The Wartime Quartet

And more published regularly!

Run a group

You can find helpful advice on how to set up a group and make the most of our Blueprints on the DRL website.

Create a Blueprint

Have an idea? Join our team of volunteers and grant holders who develop new Blueprints every semester.

Share experiences

How did it go? We would love to hear your stories! Share your reading group's experience with us and people around the world!

Scan for Blueprints!

READING GROUP BLUEPRINTS

Expand your philosophical education with the Diversity Reading List in Philosophy

Of the 377 courses taught at the top 10 British Philosophy departments

8.3%

focus on any philosophical tradition other than the Western Analytic tradition

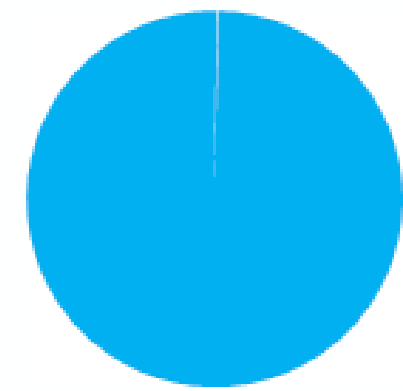

3.1%

focus on any of the four broad topics of class, colonialism, race or gender

10.6%

have any non-token content related to class, colonialism, race or gender at all

0%

of courses about a specific philosopher are about someone who was not a white man

Research from 2020-21

Want to learn something different?

Students are often dissatisfied with the lack of diversity in their curriculum. But what can you do if a topic you want to learn about simply isn't taught? Start your own reading group!

And if this sounds like a daunting task, we are here to help. The Diversity Reading List team prepared a selection of ready-made Blueprints you can use to create your reading group. Each one offers a set of resources, divided by topic and arranged into a consistent narrative, accompanied by a list of questions to guide your discussion.

We hope that these Blueprints will help you explore a wide range of topics that interest you and fill the gaps left in your curriculum.

Happy learning!

Some of our Blueprint topics so far

- African Languages and African Philosophy
- Chinese Philosophy of Mind
- Class, Status, and Aesthetics
- Female Philosophers in African Philosophy
- Feminist Logic
- Nahua and Mayan Philosophy of Mind
- Native North American Ethics
- Non-Western Ecologies: A Selection
- Objectionable Commemorations
- Postcolonial Theory, Race and Caste
- Race and Aesthetics in Latin America
- Race, Disability, and Gender in Bioethics
- Sex, What Is It Good For?
- The Wartime Quartet

And more published regularly!

DRL

Run a group

You can find helpful advice on how to set up a group and make the most of our Blueprints on the DRL website.

Create a Blueprint

Have an idea? Join our team of volunteers and grant holders who develop new Blueprints every semester.

Share experiences

How did it go? We would love to hear your stories! Share your reading group's experience with us and people around the world!

Scan for Blueprints!

